

Jamie is curious about what her mom is cooking, but she's about to do something very dangerous. She's going to try to look for herself, and that could be a deadly mistake. Every year, thousands of kids burn themselves just like this. The pot accidentally tips too far and they spill scalding liquid all over themselves. If she wants to know what is on the stove, what other things do you think she could do instead?

Never, ever try to reach for a pot on the stove. Keep an eye out for younger kids too. Remind mom and dad to turn all pot handles inward and cook on the back burners so that little kids can't reach them. Let them know if they forget!
