

There are several important rules to remember when you're out and about riding your bike. One is to never try to do tricks on or near the road. Save the stunts for bike parks or times when there aren't any cars around. A second rule is to always remember: if you ever have to swerve to avoid something, be sure to swerve away from the road! If a dog runs out in front of you or you start to lose control, head for the ditch. But most important is to pay attention to your surroundings. Look for people who are sitting in their cars. You never know when some looney-toon might decide to peel out from his driveway. And look for things like potholes in the road or other obstacles that could get in the way. Be sure to remember these safety rules, so that you don't end up like this guy!

