

Amish children grow up in communities that have no televisions, no video games, and no electricity. They make everything they need themselves with their own hands, and live the old fashioned way – the way people did hundreds of years ago. They may not have fancy new stuff, but they have many things other kids don't: like experiences working with animals and more time to enjoy the company of each other and the beauty of the world around them. They have all sorts of fun with the world's biggest video game: nature. It just goes to show, there are many ways to live, and many situations that we can find happiness in!
