MANY MIRRORS PERCEPTION WORKSHEET

1. This story talks a lot about mirrors. But it isn't referring to actual mirrors – the mirrors are just a symbol. What is it a symbol for?

2. What different things go into your thoughts?

3. What do you think it means to have your own little piece of truth?

Find a partner, and sit down with them to figure out how your mirrors on the world differ from each other in the following ways:

1. Something he/she likes that I don't: _____

2. Something he/she knows about that I don't know as much about:

2. An experience he or she has had that I haven't had yet: _____

2. Something about their family/home that is different from mine:

The 3 most important things in life for me and my partner:

Me

My partner

1. _____

2. _____

2. _____

3. _____

3. _____

Because we all have different thoughts and experiences, there are many things we can learn from one another. Think of something you've learned from someone else, and write it in the space below.

What is something you know about that you think other people might not know as much about? What can other people learn from you?

Where do you think wisdom comes from? What are the different ways to get knowledge? _____
